

This collage is assembled from photos people submitted when asked "Using photos from your camera roll, what does peace look like to you?"

How people think of peace in their daily lives is called 'Everyday Peace'. The collage above is loosely organised: are there any themes you can see uniting the pictures? Are there any that stick out, and if so, why? Which photos look like peace to you?

This collage is a product of the Visualising Peace project, a vertically integrated project involving students and staff. The project explores what stories, narratives and ideas people associate with peace. For more, search for Visualising Peace's Library, Museum or Podcast.

With thanks to Alex Beckett, Truman Cunningham, Kritvi Gupta, Peter Napier, Will Porter, Luke Robinson, Tom Rosas, Mathilda Singer, Anna Tillotson, Derek van Voorst, Annie Waters and Beccie White

Collated by Robert Rayner